

Congratulations to Karen! She (and her Valentine) just won a private golf lesson and a couple's massage at Chelsea Piers.

GOOD LOOKS

Wednesday, February 16, 2011

Tanya B: A bright light in yoga fashion

Yoga instructor Tanya Boulton had a fashion epiphany. "On the streets my students were so stylish—you really saw their taste. But in the yoga studio, they wore black Lululemon head to toe," explains Boulton.

Not that Boulton, 33—who was born in Hong Kong, raised in California, and now teaches at Pure Yoga in New York—is categorically opposed to black Lululemon clothes. But the yogi-turned-fashion designer felt compelled to dress her students in workout clothing that was as expressive and vibrant as their practice.

"When you're doing yoga, it's a very goddess-like movement," Boulton says. "It's very feminine, sacred, and beautiful. I think that women should feel that way when they're practicing."

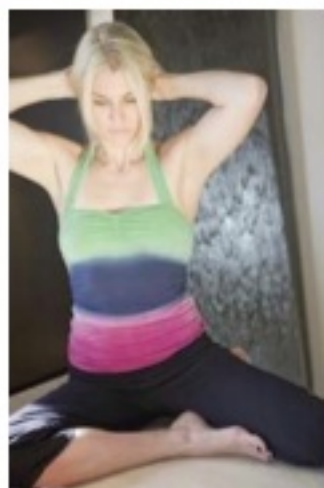

Photo via Tanya-B

Vision, she certainly didn't lack for. But Boulton did need someone with the technical chops to help her design the collection. Luckily, she met Karin Ulmänder, a "fabrics genius," in Hong Kong and the two hit it off.

The brand's biggest seller is its signature tie-dye halter ($59), which has a sturdy built-in bra, a sexy open back, and serious fashion appeal. Boulton says it's designed for the woman who wants to leave class and look stylish while she's out running errands or grabbing lunch with friends.

These clothes are for a broader, urban audience. "Not every person is out there hugging trees," Boulton laughs. "There's a big population of people who don't have 'om' tattooed on their back." —Catherine Pearson

Boulton shows off her signature tie-dye halter

wellness
wire

GOODdeals
Wellness Made Affordable

subscribe!

Get the latest wellness news, deals + event invites

Enter your e-mail

SSGMLIP

follow us

"GREAT PLACE,
CRAZY VIEW,
UNBELIEVABLE
SIZE."

— Tamás H. ★★★★★

Popular Posts in Good Looks

1. Cetaphil: Why the popular cleanser isn't doing your skin any favors
2. No sweat: Making sure your skin doesn't get a workout at the gym
3. Extraction wars: Aestheticians face off over pore pressure
4. Cleaner Cleansers: Your post-Cetaphil skin-care regimen
5. The 7 habits of highly effective skin care
6. New York Native: 3 artisanal beauty brands born and raised in the city

Good Looks Blogroll

About.com Spas

American Spa Blog

Beauty Counter

"Best Yoga"
—New York Magazine